

Questions

1. Bill Prince Smith was a farmer, a teacher and a dentist before becoming a writer of children's books at the age of 60. Now, thirteen years later, he's written more than eight books. Everyday, he gets into his office and writes. And every night he gives his work to his wife to read. "She says she doesn't like something", says Bill. And my ten grandchildren don't live near here but they also read my stories and say whether they're good or bad. And so Bill's learned what young children like to read. Bill writes about the life near the village and on the farm near it. His fifth book is his favorite: The Sheepdog is about a farmer and a dog that helps him. "I've always liked animals", says Bill. "And dogs are so clever. They learn very quickly". Last year, the book was made into a film with real actors and animals. The film-makers used the latest computer technology to make people think that the animals are speaking. Bill was very pleased with the film. "Sometimes the film-makers change book but they didn't change mine. I love the ways they make the film more exciting and so is my enquire grand-daughter".

Choice

Match

How many grandsons does he have?

They use the latest computer technology to make people think that the animals are speaking.

Where does he write children's book?

He writes children's book in his office.

How old is Bill?

The sheepdog is about a farmer and a dog that helps him.

What is The Sheepdog about?

He has 9 grandson. (10 grandchildren including 1 grand-daughter)

How to make people think

He is 73 years old.

that animals are speaking?

Why did Bill like the film of The Sheepdog?

He loves the ways they make the film more exciting but they didn't change the film.